With over 1.6 billion people globally learning the language, English-as-a-second-language (ESL) products and services are an estimated US$56 billion industry, according to data from Ambient Insight. What's more, digital ESL applications are booming in both market value and popularity, democratizing access to the world's most popular language.

Against this backdrop, Lingo has developed a software-as-a-service learning platform with a complete suite of products that seamlessly blends education and technology by way of two distinct business units: ELL Technologies and Lingo Learning.

ELL Technologies provides online training and assessment for English language learning, while Lingo Learning is a print-based publisher of English language learning programs in China.

Lead product ELL Technologies offers materials and lessons for a consumer base of academic institutions, governments and corporations.

A major differentiating feature of the product is Lingo's speech recognition technology that allows users to analyze pronunciation and simulate real-life conversation scenarios. Users can record and compare themselves with native speakers to match their pronunciation.

Lingo Learning is a print-based publisher of English language learning programs in China, where Lingo has a particularly strong presence.

It also recently secured a new distribution partnership with JPH Consultoria Academica in Guatemala.

Lingo has also invested in a new Learning Management System (LMS) to include access to the full content library configured to individual client requirements through a chat functionality. It also completed development of a resource allocation functionality feature for the LMS for teachers.

Outlook

Lingo will continue to focus on developing innovative software and content geared towards the growing global demand for English language learning products. Its recent investment in a new Learning Management System is positioning ELL Technologies for growth in 2019. In the coming quarters, it will be focused on driving business growth through both existing and new customers.

Geographically, Lingo is looking to Latin America and Asia as major markets. The company plans to enter the regions via strategic distribution initiatives.
