AFC Energy chief expects more deals to power share price higher

The chief executive of AFC Energy (LON:AFC), Adam Bond, claims investors could see further a uplift in the value of their holdings as the firm eyes more commercial deals.

Shares in the industrial fuel cell developer have soared by 300% to 41p since the start of the year and Bond reckons there is still plenty of growth potential in 2015.

"The market for fuel cell technology deployment is growing daily and I expect AFC Energy will remain at the forefront of this emerging growth industry for many years to come," AFC's CEO told Proactive Investors.

The company, already active in Korea, Thailand, Dubai and Germany, today called on the UK government to instigate a full review over the country's stalling hydrogen policy.
